Miss Blakeney Complimented

Miss Martha Blakeney of Little Rock, Ark., who is a charming visitor to Ocala, the guest of her aunt, Mrs. J. M. Gross at the Methodist parsonage, was the inspiration this morning for an informal sewing party given by Miss Sara Gross, who entertained about thirty friends in her honor.

The guests were entertained on the broad veranda which was attractively decorated with jardiniere of sun-flowers and potted plants. Conversation and needle work while the first hour away pleasantly and then additional pleasure was added by vocal selections rendered by the guest of honor, who possesses a voice of exquisite sweetness. Miss Franklin Harvey, a vivacious visitor from South Carolina, cleverly gave several interesting readings and Miss Marguerite Porter and Miss Marion Long rendered delightful piano selections.

As the guests arrived punch was served them by Miss Cecile Downs and at twelve o'clock an ice cream course with crystallized grapefruit peel was enjoyed. The lovely hostess was assisted during the morning by her mother, and Misses Gladys Martin and Louise Bouvier in serving.

Enjoying this pretty party characterized by informality and utmost pleasure were Misses Blakeney, Edith Williams, Nellie Gottlieb, Mae Stein, Elsie Meade, Ellen Stripling, Sue Moore, Emma Perry, Blanche Whaley, Irene Tompkins, Gladys Martin, Nellie Beckham, Irma Blake, Mamie Ruth Saunders, Marion and Dorothy Long, Blair Woodrow, Martha Kate Rentz, Margaret Jackson, Collie Clark, Mabel Bachelder, Lurline Bridges, Ada Sanders, Marie Burnett, Musie Bullock, Katherine Pyles, Colby, Cecile Downs, Marguerite Porter, Franklin Harvey, Annie Atkinson. . . .

For her bright little granddaughter Miss Marie McKean of Tampa, Mrs. W. S. Bullock entertained at a matinee party this afternoon, her guests including Sidney and Alice Cullen, Mary Eleanor Anderson, Margaret Gerig, Margaret Chace, Nellie Wallis, Helen Killebrew, Elizabeth Nelson and Florence Harvey. They were accompanied by Miss Alice Bullock. "In Grandma Land," by local talent was witnessed at the Temple, after which the merry crowd went to the Court Pharmacy to enjoy ice cream, the half hour there concluding the delightful party. . . .

Mrs. D. S. Woodrow, Miss Blair Woodrow and guest, Miss Franklin Harvey, are up from Lake Weir for a visit of several days to Miss Martha Kate Rentz. . . .

Miss Irma Brigrance returned today from Lake City, where she attended the Baptist assembly. . . .

Mrs. S. P. Hollinrake and sons, Allen and Lynne, returned home yesterday from a month's visit with relatives in Chicago. . . .

"Runaway June"

feet, and his eyes flamed. He caught his wife by the wrist and pulled her away from her mother.

"Here's one thing you can't explain." He dropped her wrist, and she stood away with half closed eyes, but there was no mercy in him. "I saw you rush from a house in a filmy stage costume."

There was a strained tenseness in the group which surrounded them. John Moore started to come to his daughter, but Ned merely waved him back. "It was moving picture work. Very well. But tell me this—how could any girl who could not endure the humiliation of accepting money from her husband consent to appear on the street for any purpose in such a costume?"

There was a deathlike stillness among them, broken by a wild sobbing from the little runaway bride.

"Ned!" she cried. "Oh, Ned!" And she clung upon his arm. He held coldly rigid. "Forgive me! You can't know how I've suffered! You can't know how I've loathed it all! I was so mistaken, so wrong! I thought I had such a wonderful ideal. When I had achieved my independence, when I need no longer look to you for money, I was to return to you, and we were to walk hand in hand through life in that love which can be founded only upon mutual respect, which asks love for love and nothing more. I meant our love to be without a flaw. No man can understand the hurt to a woman when after marriage she becomes absolutely dependent on his charity."

"Why, June!" The small, mild voice of Mrs. Moore, and she stepped forward with deep concern on her gentle face. "What is all this talk about a husband's charity?" And she turned with wonder to Father Moore. "A husband makes only one gift to his wife, and that is at the altar. After that everything he has is hers, if people will only remember the marriage service. Your ring is a symbol of it. 'With all my worldly goods I thee endow.'"

Gilbert Blye clutched his black Vandyke and looked at the ceiling; then he smiled suavely.

"That's a great ideal! I'll work it into the future!" But no one heard him. There was an audible snuffle from Iris Blethering, and Tommy Thomas was looking intensely sentimental.

"And you, my son?" She turned with surprising severity on Ned Warner. "Have you forgotten that you promised to love, cherish and protect my daughter?"

There was a cry from the little runaway bride and a sob from Ned Warner, as, oblivious to all around them, they clasped each other in a solemn embrace.

From that loving clasp the beautiful wife of Ned Warner raised a radiantly happy countenance to her mother.

"And I have no problem," she laughed, and then she cried. And Iris Blethering and Tommy Thomas sobbed together and formed a lasting friendship. And everybody was happy, including Marie and Officer Dowd, who had become conscious at the mention of the marriage service, and Aunt Debby, who was praising her Redeemer in an unconsciously audible voice, and Bouncer, who was leaping and barking indiscriminately for the benefit of everybody and anybody.

"Where are they? Where are they?" screamed a shrill voice, and Honoria Blye burst into the group.

Gilbert Blye walked serenely over to meet her.

"You may go home to your parrot, Honoria," he advised her quite happily. Then there came a cold sobriety in his black eyes. "You can't interfere with my business this time as you have done ever since we were married, and you can no longer assume a dominance over me with your money." Suddenly the glow returned to his black eyes, and he looked to June and smiled his suave smile. "I have worked out my independence."

CHAPTER III.

THERE was a gay supper party at the New York cafe that night. The Blye Stock company entertained their departing star and her friends. Ned Warner sat beside his happy June. There seemed an extra affection tonight between Father and Mother Moore and Bobbie and Iris Blethering, and Tommy Thomas was the gayest of the gay.

The eyes of the white mustached Orin Cunningham twinkled, incessantly, and heavy T. J. Edwards sat with a smile of intense satisfaction on his thick lips. The feature was finished with out an accident, and the first of the films was fine. Bobbie Blethering and Blye took an instant liking to one another. The old feud was entirely forgotten.

"They're good people, Ned," whispered the happy June. "And they were so good to me!"

Ned beamed down at June with delight in every infection of her voice. In every curve of her beautiful head, in every fleeting expression of her lovely countenance, in every glance of her lustrous eyes, June forgot to be all the tearing strain of these past days; quite gone were all his bitterness and hate.

In her wedding gown, which she had donned over again, June was a vision of beauty.

Up rose Gilbert Blye at the head of the table. In his hand he held a small shining object. He made a wonderful speech about it, a speech full of wit and sentiment and good will and things which made everybody happy, and with an extraordinary flourish of words he presented that watch to the little runaway bride.

Amid whacking applause the little runaway bride made a blushing speech of acceptance; then there was a whispered consultation between herself and the deserted groom, begun by a suggestion from the latter. Then up rose the beaming Ned Warner and made a manly speech; a generous speech, a speech full of heart bursting happiness, and amid great applause he presented that tiny watch to the dark, handsome, black Vandyked Gilbert Blye.

Then up rose Bobbie Blethering and looked at the clock and motioned to the head waiter.
